Keep the study guide open and next to you while you read. The sections are sequential, and allow you to annotate (a fancy word for taking notes). As you read the book, continue to take notes within this guide. Once you finish, you'll have a complete study guide, IN YOUR OWN WORDS. The fact is, that actually taking notes and then reading them, means that you learn while you take the notes, it's easier to read since it is in your own words, AND you will actually master the material since you have experienced it in multiple ways (reading AND writing). If you are a general reader, I want to call your attention towards our sections on annotating and analysis. As a student, I want you to focus on writing your own annotations and using these activities for your own understanding. For teachers, I have included specific activities for you to try with your classes. You have my

This book is intended to facilitate the meaningful inclusion of students with disabilities in district and state assessments as required by the 1997 amendments to the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. First, an introductory chapter offers reasons for including students with disabilities in district and statewide accountability systems. Chapters 2 through 6 address the specifics of including children with disabilities, such as deciding how students participate in district and state tests, eligibility for assessment accommodations, how to decide which accommodations are appropriate for use in assessments, the characteristics of alternate assessments, and including English language learners with disabilities in assessments. Chapters 7 through 10 address using assessment results, how the Individualized Education Program (IEP) can be restructured to promote greater participation in the accountability system, teacher and service provider collaboration, gaining support from administrators, parent involvement in testing decisions, and the legalities of restructuring accountability systems that include all students. Extensive appendices include sample forms and worksheets for participation decision making, IEP development, assessment accommodations, and student feedback; checklists of criteria for deciding about participation, accommodations, and assessment type; a guide to staff development; and a list of Technical Assistance and Dissemination Networks. (Individual chapters identify additional resources.) (CR).
